

Objectid	Description	Image	Thumb
1,621	Control box at farm	 A large, rectangular metal control box, heavily rusted and weathered, mounted on a simple metal stand. The box has a flat top with a small, dark, rectangular object resting on it. It is situated in a dimly lit, possibly underground or enclosed space with rough, uneven walls.	 A small, square thumbnail image showing the same rusted metal control box from a slightly different angle, confirming its location and appearance.
1,621	End view in-situ at the farm	 A photograph showing the control box in its full operating context. The box is at the bottom of the frame, with a green-painted mechanical component (possibly a pump or motor) mounted on top of it. Various pipes, hoses, and electrical wires are visible, connecting the equipment to the surrounding environment. Two yellow cylindrical containers are also present. The background is a rough, textured wall.	 A small, square thumbnail image showing the same scene as the main image, providing a quick reference to the equipment's location and setup.

Objectid	Description	Image	Thumb
1,621	General view in-situ at the farm	 A large, rusted mechanical device, possibly a pump or engine, is mounted on a concrete base in a stone-walled room. The device features a large flywheel on the left and a smaller pulley on the right, connected by a belt. A long, horizontal pipe extends from the top of the engine. The surrounding walls are made of rough, textured stone, and the floor is dirt and debris.	 A small thumbnail image of the same mechanical device, showing a different angle or a close-up of a component.

Objectid	Description	Image	Thumb
1,621	Installed in the Lister Room, Hall2

Objectid	Description	Image	Thumb
1,621	Installed in the Lister Room, Hall2
1,621	On display in Lister room, 2006

Objectid	Description	Image	Thumb
1,621	Original tanks at the farm
1,621	Side of the engine view in-situ at the farm

Objectid	Description	Image	Thumb
1,621	Side view in-situ at the farm		