| Image       |  A detailed photograph of a vintage green Stuart engine. The engine is mounted on a wooden base. It features a large red flywheel on the left side, connected to the engine block by a chain drive. The engine block is painted green and has the word "STUART" in red capital letters on its side. There are several bolts and nuts visible on the engine. A brass-colored component, possibly a carburetor or valve, is attached to the right side. The background is a dark, textured surface. |
| Thumb       |  A small thumbnail image of the Stuart engine, showing the green body and red flywheel.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
